India's low Human Development Index

1259. SHRI RAMDAS AGARWAL: Will the the Minister of FINANCE be pleased to state:

(a) whether Government are aware that India's Human Development Index ranks 123rd amongst the 160 countries according to the 1991 Human Development Report released recently by the United Nations Development Programme;

(b) if so, what are the real causes of our poor socio-economic progress in various parts of the country; and

(c) whether Government propose to release more funds for the year 1991-92 for human development programmes; if so, the details thereof and if not, the reasons therefor?

THE MINISTER OF STATE IN THE MINISTRY OF FINANCE (SHRI RAMESHWAR THAKUR): (a) Yes, Sir. However, it may be noted that the Report also shows that India's rank by the Human Development Index is better than its ranking by GNP, indicating that on an average we have done better in the area of human development than other countries at comparable level of economic development.

(b) There has been appreciable socio-economic progress in various parts of the country since independence as is borne out by improvement in per capita income, life expectency, literacy rate and the percentage of population below the poverty line. However, the progress made has not been sufficient on account of the fact that we started with a very poor socio-economic condition at the time of independence. Also inves tible surplus required for socio-economic needs of a growing population has been inadequate The latter is itself a result of the low level of development and all developing economies are faced with this phenomenon.

(c) Economic growth with social justice has always been the basic objective of planning in India. The Union Budget for 1991-92 presented in the Parliament on 24-7-1991 provides for higher Plan outlays and Non-Plan expenditure than in the previous years for various areas relating to human development. (The details of these proposals are annexed). There will also be substantial allocations for socio service sectors in the budgets of the State Governments, which should contribute to human development. There are moreover certain other programmes, under which some of the expenditure will contribute to human development.
